The Crusades

The crusades were a series of wars lasting from 1096-1300 A.D. The crusaders were made up of many different groups of knights (1-9). They mostly fought the people in the middle east who didn't believe in God. In 1094-1099, the Crusaders helped the Greek Christians of the Byzantine empire when they called for help.
In return, they promised their souls to God. The first Crusade was the only Crusade that actually did anything great. The Children's Crusade was a failed attempt to establish a second latin kingdom in Jerusalem around 1200. The result ended in sending off all of the kids on boats where they were wrecked in the storms.
